AUTHORS AND SOURCES OF INDIVIDUAL VERSES

On the following pages authors and sources of the individual varses included in Vol. II are cited. The minimum necessary information about each author (or source) is given, as well as bibliographical references to more detailed information about the authors and sources. (For references of the texts used see "Abbreviations" prefixed to Vol. I and "Additional Abbreviations" included in the present volume).

At the end of each entry are given the numbers of the verses in the present volume where the authors or sources are quoted. The subhāṣita-saṁgraha-s which quote the appropriate verses are given in brackets. 'c.' after page-numbers of vol. I denotes column or columns of that page and 'a' or 'b' after 'c.' indicates the first or the second column, respectively, as the case may be.

Agni-purāṇa, One of the eighteen mahā-purāṇa-s. See for instance, R. C. Hazra, Studies in the Purāṇic Records on Hindu Rites and Customs; p. 134 sqq.

Nos. 2000, (2403), (2439), 2503, (3695).

AṄGADA, poet. No information. Mentioned in PG. (Cf. CC1 4, NCC1 51).

NĀRĀYAṆALACCHI, probably identical with Nārāyaṇa-labdhi (Nārāyaṇābdhi), a poet quoted in Skm. Nārāyaṇalacchi is quoted as the source of one verse in SkV where it is suggested that it is a corruption of the author Nārāyaṇa-labdhi and a popular form of Nārāyaṇa-lakṣmī ; since only Lakṣmī-nārāyaṇa is well known as a name, it was suggested that Nārāyaṇa-lakṣmī might be a work of that name. (Cf. CC1 293, SkV LXXXIII, Kav 51).

| cii | 17 | add below : |
| | | 48.50 A. Subhāṣita-sudhānandalaharī is a collection of 130 ethical and descriptive verses preserved in two MSs in the Madras Government Oriental Manuscripts Library, giving two recensions of the text. Both recensions have some gaps which were, as far as possible, reconstructed by Dr. V. Raghavan who published this anthology in Volume II of the Malayamārutaḥ, New Delhi 1973 ; pp. 92-115. A great part of the verses are well-known subhāṣita-s culled from the Mahābhārata (e.g. p. 112, lines 9-10), the Pañcatantra (e.g. p. 107 verse 30), the Hitopadeśa (e.g. p. 112, lines 11-12), Bhartṛhari's śataka-s (e.g. p. 119, verses 52 and 53), so-called Cāṇakya's sayings (e.g. p. 113, lines 5-6, or verse 112), Bhallaṭaśataka (e g. p. 93, verse 14), Caurapañcāśikā (e.g. p. 106, verse 14), Prasannarāghava (e.g. p. 111, lines 15-18), etc. Some verses appear in the oldest subhāṣita-saṁgraha-s only, e.g. in Skm (p. 110, lines 15-16) or VS (e.g. p. 115, verse 126). |

PREFACE

Of the Maha-subhaṣita-saṁgraha, the extensive collection of wise sayings and entertaining verses in Sanskrit, intended to be issued in twenty volumes, Volume III, which is now being placed before scholars, contains over two thousand verses, Nos. 4209-6285, beginning with the Devanagarī letters आ, इ and ई. In the compilation of this volume, in addition to the source materials used in the previous volumes, relevant materials extracted from certain extra sources have also been utilized. While the printing of the present volume was in progress, I was engaged also in preparing a two-volume Descriptive Catalogue of Authors Quoted in Sanskrit Anthologies and Inscriptions, to be published shortly by Ms. Otto Harrassowitz, Wiesbaden (W. Germany). Studies in this regard had enabled me to revise and expand substantially, the "Index of Authors and Sources of Individual Verses" included in the present volume (pp. 1493-1558). Readers of Vols. I and II of the Maha-subhaṣita-saṁgraha are, therefore, requested to consult also, with advantage, the relevant Index in the present volume for additional information.

In the present volume, special attention had been paid to the presentation of the materials included, viz., the original verses, their translation, varia lexica and the Indices, in which I received active collaboration from Śrī S. Bhaskaran Nair, Director of the V. V. Research Institute. It was he who checked the textual verses and fixed the readings in a number of doubtful verses, suggesting suitable emendations and revising the Critical Notes accordingly with the addition of necessary explanations in the Footnotes ; touched up inelegant translations besides himself translating a large number of verses ; and verified and revised, as necessary, the different Appendices to this volume. It is my pleasant duty to record my infinite gratitude and sincerest appreciation for the strenuous editorial work which Śrī Nair has performed in a most scholarly manner towards making this volume more perfect and handy to the cultured reader. The credit of seeing this publication through the press and seeing to its elegant get-up also goes to him. In short, the present work of mine has been immensely benefited by the vast experience which Śrī Nair possesses in editing Indological research works.

My thanks are due, in full measure, also to Śrī K. V. Sarma, Acting Director, the V. V. B. Institute of Sanskrit and Indological Studies, Panjab University, for making available to the Editor his expert advice, time and again, towards the scholarly presentation of the volume.

Yes, I see it now, oh ! king. You alone always bear the entire earth. Huge mountains are by themselves very burdensome and the earth would sink along with them; though capable of lifting it, the Boar and others are not superior to you; as for the efficiency in maintaing cattle (?) and such things—well it is not within the ken of lustrousness. Why do you torture your soul in hundreds of births in vain with a view to amassing wealth ? Prosperity comes to the house of a lame person; those who have conquered the earth have become poor by the will of fate; thus, these which constitute the annihilators of the good aims of life have been set aside by some (intelligent) people. But the idle thoughts (of amassing wealth) create delusions in the mind at every step of some dull-witted people. (A. A. R.).

The soul and the mind are styled to be the "internal senses" by those who are conversant with the workings of these two. By a conjoint effort of these two, volition is engendered.

The soul, the mind, the sense-organs, and the sense-objects, all these are said to be included under the category of "external sense". Volition and muscular movement are the means of pleasurable sensations of the soul.

The (connecting) medium between the "internal and the external sense" seems to be a conscious effort. Therefore, suppressing this conscious effort one may try to become the master of his own mind. (M. N. Dutt's translation).

A king, after having controlled his senses should direct his attention to (the cultivation of) the following four branches of learning, namely, ānvīkṣikī, trayī, vārta and daṇḍanīti, in cooperation with men versed in them and acting according to their precepts.

Ānvīkṣikī, trayī, vārta and daṇḍanīti,—these and these only are the four eternal divisions of knowledge, that pave the way of corporeal beings to happiness...

Ānvīkṣikī deals with the knowledge of the self; trayī with piety and impiety; vārta with gain and loss of wealth; and daṇḍanīti with justice and injustice.

Ānvīkṣikī, trayī and vārtā are considered to be the most excellent of all knowledge. But their presence is no avail where daṇḍanīti is neglected.

When a great leader of men attains proficiency in daṇḍanīti he becomes the master of the other remaining branches of knowledge.

Ānvīkṣikī is the science of spiritual knowledge, for it investigates the nature of weal and woe of mankind ; one seeing the real nature of things with the assistance of ānvīkṣikī renounces both joy and grief. (M. N. Dutt's translation of KN [BI]).

In her lord's embrace, at all times as thirsting for it in her innermost self, she desires to be like Gaurī in (that) body of Śiva (which has his wife for one half). At times not suitable for pleasure, the amorous one spends her time with her beloved in the basing house, in the garden, or at a festival. Even at the shadow of another girl, even at his casual talk with another, she is angry with her lover; and in misfortune and the like, she identifies herself with him. Without going elsewhere or doing anything else, she hangs upon her lover, as a poor fragile old woman clings to the evening sunlight in the winter. When her lord turns aside on the bed, she thinks it a separation, and even his visit to the temple she looks upon as absence in different part of the country. From the flow of excess fondness, through the manifestations of great attachment, the woman follows her beloved like a shadow, whether he walks or stands. (These qualities of artfulness, confidence, endurance, and passion, in the nature of women, in the four stages of youth, manifest themselves in the women's courting of their lovers)[1]. (M. Dillon's, M. Fowler's and V. Raghavan's translations).

Let that be, why speak much ? The best fruit of worldly life is the help rendered to others ; even this is denied to us to the smallest extent as fate remains unfavourable ; here we are, called men, spending our lives uselessly ; and the attainment of the eight perfections by the persons of our fate consists of merely filling their own bellies ! like, but the distressed ladies detest); with the blue lotuses, the comparison would be inappropriate in regard to the eyes' excessive dejection in the autumnal season (when the blue lotuses bloom, but when the ladies become fearful of enemies' attack). Here, I visualise but a single object of comparison (for the eyes of the ladies placed between the torrents of tears), being the camarī-deer secretly sheltering between streams caused by a constant and heavy waterfall. (d) °पशुपा: SSB.

Sragdharā metre.

The guardians of the quarters, viz., Indra and others, (the deity of riches, viz.,) Kubera, the Moon, the Sun, the Nāga-s, (the demi-gods, viz.,) Vidyādhara-s and others—all these divinities are your enemies. Thus, oh! dear, is there any one who can bestow boons upon you and is respected by you on account of his superiority? Listening to these words of his beloved, the ten-faced Rāvaṇa uttered with his ten mouths—(there is Lord Śiva known by the names) Śūlin, Śaṁbhu, Pīnākī, Śiva, Bhava, Paśupa, Śarva, Īśa and Bharga[1]. (S. Bhaskaran Nair's translation).

1. By uttering various synonyms of Lord Śiva, Rāvaṇa emphasized the superiority of his favourite deity.

Thrice blest indeed is He who drink in the heady sweetness of the lovely countenance of Rādhā, with her eyes partly closed in languor, cooing sweetly and indistinctly like a dove, with the lustre of her pearly teeth lighting her lips, her bosom still and her entire form motionless with a delicious lassitude after the turmoil of love's warfare ! ## AUTHORS AND SOURCES OF INDIVIDUAL VERSES

On the following pages authors and sources of the individual verses included in Vol. III are quoted. The minimum necessary information about each author (or source) is given, as well as bibliographical references to more detailed information about the authors and sources[1]. (For references to the texts used see "Abbreviations" and "Additional Abbreviations" prefixed to Vol. I and II, respectively, and the one to the present Volume).

At the end of each entry are given numbers of verses in the present Volume where the authors or sources are quoted. The subhāṣita-saṁgraha-s which quote the appropriate verses are given in brackets. 'c.' after page-numbers of Vol. I and/or Vol. II denotes column or columns of that page and '1' or '2' after 'c.' indicates the first or the second column, respectively, as the case may be.

AKBARĪ(YA)-KĀLIDĀSA. See Vol. I p. 319 c. 1.

Nos. 5317 (RJ quoted as Akabarī-Kālidāsa), 6124 (PV, SSS).

Agni-purāṇa. See Vol. II p. 929 c. 1.

Nos. 4579, 4721, 4805, 4884, 4886, (5073).

ACALA(SIṀHA). See Vol. II p. 929 c. 2; add: Not later than the beginning of the 12th century (verses attributed to the author are quoted in SkV). 30 of the author's alleged verses are quoted in SkV, Skm, JS, ŚP, Pad, SuSS and Vidy.

No. 5723 (PG, but in Skm a. Keśava-sena[deva]).

LAKṢMAṆĀDITYA. Pupil of Kṣemendra and probably son of a king. 11th century. Quoted by Kṣemendra. Only one verse of his is quoted in Kavi.
No. 5432.

LAKṢMĪDHARA. Common name. Different from Lakṣmīdhara quoted in Vol. I p. 356 c. 2-357 c. 1. Son of Śrīstamba (Vaikuṇṭha-bhaṭṭa), grandson of Ajita, great grandson of Nara-vāhana from Kośala or one Bhaṭṭa Kośala settled in Bengal. Śāṇḍilya Brāhmaṇa. Not later than the beginning of the 12th century (verses attributed to Lakṣmīdhara are quoted in SkV, but probably earlier, for some of the verses were already quoted by alaṁkāra- writers of the 11th century). 32 verses attributed to the author are quoted in SkV, Kav, Skm, JS, ŚP, Prasanna, Pad, RJ, SH, Regnaud VI and Vidy. (Cf. CC₁ 358, SkV XCV, Kav p. 96-7, JS 56, AP 81, v. B. Bhaṭṭa-charjee, A Bengali Poet in the Court of Bhoja in Indian Culture (April 1935) 702-4; J. Ch. Ghosh, Bengali Poet Lakṣmīdhara and Bhojadeva in Indian Culture 2. 2; No. 360-1).
Nos. 4219 (JS), 6002 (or Dharaṇīdhara SkV, Kav).
